With more and more people needing to reach their network over the internet, using a reliable and safe internet connection has become a matter of life and death. With Windows 10 and 8, they can use VPN services such as TunnelBear and Tinc in order to get a safe VPN. However, many people still depend on a regular Internet Service Provider (ISP) and they need VPN services that can work with it. To help people get those, PC Tools for Windows 8 and 10, offers VPN services that can be connected over your regular Internet Service Provider (ISP). As an added bonus, these VPN services will work with your regular ISP but you can configure the service just as you would configure a VPN service. This is made possible by using a VPN connection. VPN connections make all of your devices appear as if they were connected through a different device. For example, all of your web traffic will be encrypted. This means that any information your internet service provider receives about your activities can't be used to track your activities. PC Tools VPN service can do just that. But since it's connected to your regular ISP, it can report it to your ISP when you are making a request. This means that they will know what websites you're looking at, when you're using the internet, and even which files you're downloading. However, if you're careful about what files you download, you should be able to prevent any information from your ISP from being used to track your activities. When you're connected to your regular internet service provider, your browsing habits are sent to the VPN service. The VPN service keeps a record of your activities. Therefore, you should make sure that you do not download anything that might be tracked. If you want to download an encrypted file, PC Tools' VPN service will help you make sure you're downloading a legitimate file. VPN Service Features: 1. PC Tools VPN Service can automatically detect your ISP as well as your IP address. 2. PC Tools VPN Service can automatically detect if you're connected to any public VPN service or not. 3. PC Tools VPN service can automatically connect you to a VPN service based on your IP address as well as a specific range. 4.
