Pulp Mill, Walsall Pulp Mill, Walsall is a Grade II listed corn mill at the edge of town in Walsall, West Midlands, England. It is of brick construction and is a circular building with two storeys of windows, the upper storey with four lights. History Built around 1780 in the Gothic style, this building provided a total of 90 sacks of pulp waste per day. The mill was unable to compete against imports from the continent and fell out of business around 1880. It was converted to a tea and beer warehouse in about 1910. It was used by West Midlands Electricity Board as a warehouse after closure in 1996. It is a Grade II* listed building, with English Heritage noting that although its long period of closure has "damper-staved the architecture to some extent, it remains a remarkable survivor of an industrial zone to the south of Walsall town centre".
