a question regarding function overloading. The C11 standard (ISO/IEC 9899:2011) says that we can declare multiple functions with same name and different signatures. What's the difference between these functions? And if possible, please tell me which one to use.

void f(int i); //this one void f(int, int);
void f(int, int, int);
void f(int i, int);
void f(int i, int, int);
void f(int, int, int, int);

A: ISO/IEC 9899:2011 § 6.7.2/6 says: If the `[[call]]`, `[[construct]]`, `[[max_size]]`, `[[min_size]]`, `[[alloc]]`, or `[[dealloc]]` function is declared with a function-prototype-list, the parameter declarations in the function-prototype-list are not required to agree with the corresponding declarations in the corresponding declaration in the surrounding function body. According to this, the standard explicitly allows functions to have different parameter lists. However, it is not guaranteed that the linker will be able to generate code for more than one of them. For example, this code:

int main() { int i, i2; //void f(int i); // this one //void f(int, int); //void f(int, int, int);
void f(int i, int);
void f(int i, int, int);
void f(int i, int, int, int);

will generate this call graph: However, if you use a newer compiler (such as GCC 4.8 or Clang 3.4 or ICC 16.0), it will probably pick the first declaration in the list. (This is 0cc13bf012 facebook. Tweet. Wear your heart on your sleeve. Main menu Rocks + Diamonds Am I the only person who's weirded out by the mandatory diamond engagement ring? If you're like me, you have a deep, deep seated belief that the girl you're about to propose to is going to say YES. When he proposes, we'll say yes together. (Ok, we actually did that but I'm not telling you!) And then if she says "Yes," he'll buy her a $500,000 engagement ring and hang around all week so you don't have to see it. Just a little grudgingly to make the marriage last. And then she'll get her ring knocked off her finger by a passing by rhino. And it will be ruined forever. Even if I'm with him, I just won't be able to wear it. And so he'll buy her a new one. And that's it, you've just lost a YEAR. Or a MONTH. Or a WEEK. (I'm told that gets shorter the further the engagement goes on.) It's been an oral tradition for thousands of years. Ancient peoples knew the power of the ring. The ring of marriage symbolizes the unbreakable union. The strong bond. The commitment. People wouldn't just be happy to be asked, it would
