If you haven't heard of him...then you must've been living under a rock. Thank you for your response. I don't know if I'm living under a rock; I just haven't heard of him much either way. Why would believing in a God force you to believe he made the impostor a prophet unless you are an athiest? Athiest says God is superstitious, like the Tooth Fairy is superstitious (Not that I don't love and believe in the Tooth Fairy), isn't the capitalization of the word God an impostor's transgression? I know there are Christians that believe in a superstitious God (Yes, even the silly God of the bible) so why is there a double standard in Christians conflating God's supernatural with this? And, I'm not well versed in law, only history, so I have my own questions. If God wanted us to have a

What's new:

>The Municipal Workers Union East, along with other small unions, had planned on state-run negotiations to determine the fate of public employees. But after its legal challenge to a local budget override failed, union leaders changed their strategy and initiated strike negotiations. On Aug. 19, the General Municipal Employees Association — of which the East union is a division — issued a “notice of intent” to strike, notifying top-level officials in city hall that it would walk off the job if necessary to win contract negotiations. As of Tuesday evening, the strike had not taken place. Union representatives say that wages and benefits remain at contract levels, but that the sides will continue negotiations. “We don’t want anyone to think that we went away without a fight,” said Maureen O’Brien, a lawyer for the East union and an organizer of the strike preparations. “It’s important to take a shot at this and see what happens.” Just last month, a compromise deal — called a “funding certificate” — was hammered out to present a watered-down version of the city’s budget for the next fiscal year. Tougher cuts were made in each department, and nearly $30 million in city services were cut in return for a decrease in the public employee payroll by 5 percent. On Monday, Florida’s Supreme Court in a 4-2 ruling downgraded that budget. The ruling could lead to another round of budget cuts. Kejal Fernando-Ripeiro, co-chair of the GMA union, said the Supreme Court’s decision would stoke disagreements over the department cuts. It meant that only the two members of the Supreme Court who were members of the union are still aligned with the union on the budget, and two members of the division’s bargaining committee are now “not on the same page,” he said. Mr. Fernando-Ripeiro said he will speak with union leadership in the following weeks about whether and how to proceed. If mediation is ordered, union leaders don’t intend to strike yet. “We are in a position where we are at the table talking to them,” he said. Lawyers for
