In situ and in vitro transgenic daffodil plants. Transgenic cDNA and untransformed daffodils, Narcissus pseudonarcissus L., have been successfully regenerated after microprojectile bombardment of intact protoplasts. An average of 3-5% of the regenerated plants were transformed. The one transgenic plant regenerated from protoplasts prepared from non-transformed calli was also transgenic. Transgenic daffodils have been successfully regenerated after microprojectile bombardment of intact cuttings and by in vitro embryogenesis of the sepal explants. None of the regenerated transgenic lines displayed altered phenotypes. Each of these techniques gave transformed transgenic plants which proved to be fertile and have been successfully introgressed into the previously untransformed daffodil variety 'Sam'. A transgenic line was also regenerated by in vitro embryogenesis. This line was not fertile and no transgenic seed was recovered. The levels of expression of the transgenes in the vegetative and floral tissues of the transgenic plants was evaluated by radioactive in situ hybridisation to gene-specific probes. Microscopic examination showed altered morphology of the floral meristem of at least one transgenic line and reduced fertility in some of these. A high level of expression of the transgene was observed in the calyx, which is consistent with the role of this organ in the process of fertilisation.
