Multipotent Anticancer Progenitors and the Tumor-Stem Cell Hypothesis. The hypothesis that tumors contain a discrete population of tumor-initiating cells, termed "cancer stem cells" (CSCs), has been the subject of intense interest and debate over the past few decades. The majority of evidence supports the existence of CSCs in hematologic malignancies. However, the existence of CSCs in solid tumors has been the subject of much debate.

Individual profiles of drug concentration in blood over 24 hours for each subject are shown in Figure 3{ref-type="fig"}. All concentrations measured were higher than those seen in earlier clinical trials using free EGCG+ (Figure 2{ref-type="fig"}). !Individual profiles of drug concentration in blood over 24 hours for all 11 human subjects who received all 3 doses of PEG-catechol, an EGCG polymeric derivative. Mean values are indicated by horizontal lines. EGCG: (-)-epigallocatechin-3-gallate.](1475-2891-9-61-3){#F3} Interestingly, the rise and fall of EGCG concentration in blood appeared to follow a zonal pattern throughout each individual subject's 24-hour profile. The earlier rise in plasma EGCG might have been due to absorption of EGCG in chylomicrons or lipoproteins. Subsequently, concentrations declined because of loss of the drug from the circulation. Such a decline might have been due to loss of drug that had passed into the urine, incomplete recovery of drug that had been metabolized, and/or enterohepatic recirculation. No apparent difference in kinetic profiles was observed among the 3 dosage levels. AUC of EGCG in serum at dose 1 for each of the 11 subjects
