Development of Hepatic Function Following Liver Transplantation in Patients with Primary Biliary Cirrhosis: A Single-Center Experience with the Model for End-Stage Liver Disease Score. Many investigations have shown that the Model for End-Stage Liver Disease (MELD) score can predict posttransplant survival in patients with decompensated cirrhosis. Nevertheless, MELD scores are not associated with posttransplant graft function in patients with primary biliary cirrhosis (PBC) and might not be accurate enough to evaluate prognosis and predict early dysfunction in these patients. We investigated the factors predicting the development of graft dysfunction in 20 patients transplanted for PBC at our center. Our retrospective observational study included a cohort of consecutive adult patients who underwent liver transplantation at the University of Verona Medical Center (Verona, Italy) between 2003 and 2014 for end-stage liver disease secondary to PBC. We analyzed clinical features, liver function tests, and histological findings. The main risk factor for the development of graft dysfunction was the time from transplantation to end-stage liver disease ($P=0.004$). When evaluating the cutoff values to predict the risk of graft dysfunction, the area under the curve was 0.999 (95% confidence interval: 0.993-1.006) for the cutoff value of 53 in the ROC analysis. The cutoff value of 28 for the percentage of portal triad count (PTC) was also very accurate for the risk of graft dysfunction (area under the curve, 0.834; 95% confidence interval: 0.740-0.936). When patients with low PTC (28) were compared, the median values of total bilirubin, international normalized ratio, aspartate aminotransferase, and prothrombin time were significantly different ($P=0.006$, $P=0.010$, $P=0.005$, and $P=0.024$, respectively). PTC and MELD are the most accurate tools for estimating posttransplant graft dysfunction in patients with PBC. After Two Years, Afghanistan Is Finally Changing Col.
