Q: Map immutable values in Java generics The documentation for Java8 states the following about functional programming with Java: 8.2. Functional Programming and Collections Java 8 collections provide several functional-programming operations, including stream operations, map and filter methods, and the collect method. These operations help reduce imperative programming style. For example, in the previous code fragment, this: `List originalNumbers = Arrays.asList(1, 2, 3, 4, 5); List outputNumbers = originalNumbers.stream().map(intTuple -> intTuple.getItem1() * intTuple.getItem2()) .collect(Collectors.toList());` can be replaced with the following: `List outputNumbers = originalNumbers.stream().map(tuple -> tuple.getItem1() * tuple.getItem2()) .collect(Collectors.toList());` This code should work because the operations are implemented statically, and can therefore be verified to be correct at compile time. If I apply this to an immutable list of integers, I'd write something like this: `List outputList = Arrays.asList(1, 2, 3, 4, 5).stream().map(i -> i * i).collect(Collectors.toList());` but I'd get a `1cdb36666d`
