A: It sounds like the machine is trying to pass the asc-XXX file through as an HTTP response, while the web server is configured to send all unrecognized file types as HTTP 200. I would guess that the problem is at the ISP level, and it is their firewall that is rejecting the request. How Snapchat's Stories Helped My Startup, Summify.me - summify ===== Nomentatus This is where this feature is the most useful; summify.me is recommending that you follow someone; if they follow you back, they get the link. If they don't follow you, it shows their names in the stream. If they check out what you're writing, it shows your name in the stream (with a link to the original article). Hence you get traffic both from people who actually read what you have to say, and from people who were just sent to your site by a friend to check it out. Q: Writing a functional interface I have got a problem here. I need to write a functional interface that takes a given key and returns a pair of the key and its value. So it should work like this. Given: key -> value Return: A -> A This is my first Functional Interface and I have tried to do it like this : public Function myFunction(Function key,Function value) { Function f = new Function(){ @Override public V apply(T t) { return value.apply(key.apply(t)); } }; return f; } I want to override the apply function with another function that takes a parameter but cannot figure out how to replace the object of the function. A: It's a little tricky to work out what you're doing, but you were pretty close. Try something like this instead: 6d1f23a050
