The Study of Resistance, Integration and Farming is a scientific study, based on earlier research studies. It investigates the process of Swiss farmers' interactions with pesticides and fungicides, and it seeks to establish the actual state of their health and the effects of pesticide use. The SRIF Study A study that has just been started in Switzerland. Its goal is to get an overall picture of pesticide and fungicide use in Switzerland. The results will inform the appropriate steps on which governmental and political decisions can be based. Formed under the aegis of the Swiss Federal Office for the Environment, the study is led by Pietro Ciliberto and Anders Ohlsson. With close to 9,000 participants, it is one of the largest studies of its kind ever conducted. The study involves scientists from around the world. Project status Started in June 2011 the study is currently in its first wave of data collection. This is scheduled to run for 3 years. In 2013, funds were granted for the second wave of data collection.Photo : Getty A climate change lawsuit aimed at forcing the federal government to take steps to stop global warming was dismissed Thursday by a federal judge in Manhattan, all but killing the case. The suit, brought by several states and city governments, argued that President Donald Trump's administration violated the National Environmental Policy Act by not requiring further consideration of climate change in the agencies' rulemaking, under the Endangered Species Act and the Clean Air Act. After Trump took office, former Environmental Protection Agency chief Scott Pruitt and former Department of Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke withdrew required consideration, citing a "lack of formal guidance" from the Department of Justice regarding the process. In his dismissal, U.S. District Judge Victor Marrero ruled that the plaintiffs were not likely to succeed because they failed to show that the government had to determine whether climate change was a real and present danger, or set goals for eliminating it by 2100. "Plaintiffs do not advance arguments sufficient to meet the heavy burden of showing that the challenged actions were arbitrary or capricious," Mar
